Indiana-Based Woman-Owned Business Experiences Unprecedented Success

INDIANAPOLIS (February 18, 2010) – In the worst economic climate since The Great Depression, Access Garage Doors not only survives but thrives. The company recognized doubled revenue over 2008, upgraded to new facilities, and experienced an 80% increase in number of employees. “Our people have led us to these great accomplishments. It wouldn’t have been possible without them,” says company president Theresa Sapp.

In addition to financial success, the company recently became certified as a woman-owned business in the State of Indiana. Access Garage Doors also successfully relocated from their rented second-floor office space and off-site rented warehouse to a newly-remodeled 7-acre facility housing a 40,000 square foot warehouse and state-of-the-art office suites. The company expanded its list of services to include residential and commercial overhead doors, gates, entry doors, loading docks, gutters and insulation.

Access Garage Doors continued its expansion by welcoming 7 new employees in 2009. With national unemployment rates reaching double digits, Access Garage Doors grew its workforce by over 80% and plans to continue this expansion in the coming years.

Access Garage Doors is less than five years old and has exceeded growth expectations set forth by the company’s owners. “Having consulted with many companies, it is very rare for startups to achieve such high revenues in such a short period of time, regardless of economic conditions. Given the current economic climate, Access Garage Doors is to be commended,” said CPA Doug Latham of Latham & Co.
